We have been told that the people will not patriotically take another Liberty Loan. We do not believe it! Patriotism is not a garment which is cast aside after 18 months, not to be worn again! Patriotism of the right kind is deeper seated than ever. Each one has sacrificed upon the altar of liberty something which was dear. These sacrifices add fervor to our love of freedom for ourselves, and to our desire to give this greatest of blessings to all the world. Peace must be financed as well as war. > In an interview in the Matin, Mr. Sokoloff summed up the ideas he developed before the committee by declaring that the "Zionist organization demands that the conference shall recognize the historic rights of the Jewish people to Palestine, and the national home in that country. For them, Palestine is the Palestine of yore within the integrity of its historic frontiers. . The sovereignty of Palestine should belong to the League of Nations, who should confide its government to one of the great powers who would act as a mandatory."

Mr. Sokoloff insisted, however, on the point that no decision should be taken which could in any way affect non-Jewish population residing in Palestine, nor the political rights of Jews resident in all countries. According to Mr. Sokoloff, the following measures are necessary for the happy realization of the Zionist program: a methodical organization of immigration and of Jewish colonization in Palestine, as well as the most liberal autonomy in all matters concerning civil administration and teaching. If these measures are adopted, Mr. Sokoloff believes that Palestine will once again become the center of a Jewish civilization, which will but continue that of yore. ready 50 prosperous colonies which are not merely rural or urban agglom-Such is a brief resume of the erations, but the very centers of national life, have sprung into being during the past 35 years- and if sufficient aid and guarantees are given them, hundreds of thousands of Jews from all countries would be willing to return to the Promised Land.

EXISTENCE is what we make it, so also is a suit of clothes. Shakespeare has observed that it is a figure of rhetoric that by pouring the contents of a pitcher into a glass, you do empty the one and fill the other. Claiming better clothes is not nearly so effective as making them better first and claiming it afterwards. It is bad form to claim the best clothes in America, but there is no sin in trying to make them.

Advocacy by thinking Americans on the isthmus of the building of roads by the United States for the Republic of Panama, under some kind of financial agreement between the two republies, by which the expense of the roads would be regarded as a loan, and eventually repaid, is based on a knowledge of these conditions. As soon as the farmers of Papama are enabled to money through other means than the existing system, it is believed, they will begin to abandon their dependence upon rum. One of the most prominent public men of Panama, Dr. Eusebio A. Morales, formerly Minister o Washington, and lately Secretary of Government and Justice, and a candidate for the presidency at the last election, is a total abstainer from alcoholic drinks, and a resolute and uncompromising foe of the liquor trade. He has devoted the columns of his newspaper te a campaign against the liquor interests, and is doing much to enlighten his countrymen upon the desirability of substituting a sound economic system for the system now prevailing.

Dr. Morales is likewise a strong advocate of road building and of the, development of agricultural industry to ritory, and on his return the pilot had such an extent that the ruinous rum business may be eliminated as an economic factor.

"With all its lack of uniformity, Many Blast Furnaces in Alabama Are Idle, and Efforts Are Being Directed Toward Reducing Costs

BIRMINGHAM. Alabama - The southern iron market is quiet. Alamain movement is steadily bama now has only 16 active stacks compared with an average of 32 in 1918. Of these, seven are operated by five exclusive makers of iron, while the other nine are operated by a corporation subsidiary, which is turning iron into finished shapes in its steel works and rolling mills.

The steel works at Fairfield and Ensley are on day and night turn. The Chickasaw Shipbuilding Company at Mobile has laid the keels of two ships and is putting on the steel received from the Fairfield mill. Gulf States Steel is operating 60 per cent in finishing mills. The Anniston Steel works is also in operation. The Welded Steel Products Company has just completed its plant and is operating.

Labor rendered idle at coal mines and furnaces is largely absorbed by structural operations.

Current sales of pig iron have been in lots ranging from carloads to 300 Among the boot and shoe dealers tons, and not much of that has been and leather buyers in Boston are the going. SCHOOLS

A Country-City Boarding and Day School for Boys and Girls

Beacon School is established not only for the purpose of imparting the highest educational ideals but for the unbuilding of character. It has been incorporated in order that it may as an organization more efficiently carry out this purpose and

Its faculty is composed of graduates from the leading colleges, all of whom are working out the ideas and ideals for which the school is founded. The school is co-educational. We believe in co-education because the associa-tion of boys and girls in work, study, and play tends to broaden their conception of the natural relations in social life.

Opportunity is offered during the five school days for recreation with play-ound apparatus, clay modeling, arts and crafts, roller skating, swimming, and restback roller. The school is an unusual combination of the advantages of the city and the joy of life in the country. The city school home is located in a most attractive residential section. Hillsview, the country extate of the school, is situated in the Riue Hills. Special arrangements may be made for day pupils to enjoy the farm and all school activities. Chiloren are taken throughout the summer at Hillsview.

The Last and Best War Loan

IN THE world, of business a 25 per cent discount on a bill of indebtedness would be regarded as a generous discount, and the creditor to whom it should be allowed would be likely to feel satisfaction and relief exactly in proportion to the fact that whereas he had expected to pay a given amount of debt he finds himself actually held for only three-quarters of it. In the same way, the people of the United States of America are giving evidence of a similar satisfaction and relief as they face today the opening of subscriptions for their fifth great war loan. For whereas they had been led to believe that the amount required of them as a means of meeting the war indebtedness of their government at this time would be $6,000,000,000, they find themselves actually held for only three-quarters of this total. By subscribing $4,500,000,000 in the drive for funds that opens today they will be doing all that their government now asks. Moreover, if present expectations are fulfilled, the amount now subscribed will go so far in covering the war requirements that no subsequent money drives will be necessary, and the Victory Loan, so called, true to its name, will be the last of the war series.

If there were any doubt as to the success of this final drive, it would lie in the fact that the public has already gone through four similar campaigns and may be considered to be so thoroughly accustomed to the process of stimulating subscriptions as to prove a bit lethargic. The people of this country have shown some readiness, since the signing of the armistice, to accept the cessation of the fighting as the end of the war; to a certain extent they have seemed only too ready to act as if war and its obligations were already a thing of the past and as if the only thing now seriously demanding attention were the problems of reconstruction and the business of peace. Yet nobody who understands this country believes that the appearances just alluded to are anything more than superficial. Without question the people of the United States realize that this Victory Loan is every whit as important, every bit as necessary, as the four loans that were subscribed while the war was actually in progress. And if, on the one hand, the novelty of loan drives is now lacking as a spur to their interest in the matter, on the other hand they have a new incentive for subscribing to the Victory Loan in the fact that the notes now offered are, from an investment standpoint, by far the most attractive security ever put forward by the United States

That is to say, first of all, the rate of interest return is higher than it was for any of the earlier war bonds. Notes bearing interest of 434 per cent are assuredly a good proposition for all that class of people who have been accustomed to look upon a savings bank rate as about all they can hope to realize; and for the investors who have the means to subscribe for large amounts there is the option of Victory bonds bearing interest at the rate of 334 per cent which shall be free from all state, local, and federal taxes except those based on estates and inperitance. In other words, small investors may profit by the larger rate of interest without being amenable to anything more than the estate and inheritance tax and the normal federal income tax, an arrangement that will make the note practically tax free to them; while the large investors may obtain the notes on substantially equivalent basis, because similarly free from tax, by takng those that sacrifice I per cent in the rate of return, However, lest some change in taxation should affect the desirability of the notes during the terms which they have to run, the two issues are made convertible, so that an investor in either, who should subsequently find it more advantageous for him to hold the other, could readily convert, and maintain his investment in the best possible form. One more inducement peculiar to this Victory Loan is the decision of the government to allow subscriptions up to $10,000 to share in full. If the loan is oversubscribed, the amount of oversubscription will be deducted altogether from the larger subscriptions.

It is a matter for conjecture whether any noticeable proportion of the people who subscribe for this loan will take the trouble to inform themselves as to just how it to be used. That it goes to pay war expenses will doubtless satisfy the majority of the rank and file. As a matter of fact, it will go to make up the balance of about $19,000,000,000 of estimated expenditures for the iscal year ending June 30, next. Against this estimated total are to be checked off $7,000,000,000 from the Fourth Liberty bonds, $1,000,000,000 from War Savings certificates, about $6,000,000,000 from taxes. The government debt is now in the neighborhood of $24,000,-000,000; but it is worth while to remember that the expenditures, which shortly after the armistice were declared to have reached a maximum in excess of $2,000,-000,000 a month, are expected, after the war bills shall have been paid, to shrink rapidly to something much nearer $2,000,000,000 a year, in addition to interest and sinking fund charges on the public debt. As an offset to these great expenditures, the resources of the country are greater than ever. Funds and deposits of the Nation's banks are showing figures far in excess of what they were a year ago, crop reports are very favorable, and rehabilitation needs are likely to call for increased activity in all branches of American manufacture and production: and above all, with every division of men demobilized the rate of expenditure grows less.

There is, therefore, no reason why the people of the United States should not at once subscribe the Victory Loan. That the loan has been offered at a favorable time is already well indicated by the steadiness with which the outstanding Liberty Loan issues have maintained themselves in the market; and in the prospect of a steadily improving financial situation, with business and financial sentiment easy and confident, and with peculiarly attractive terms for lenders, this last Victory Loan should be nothing less than an immediate success.

Japanese Methods in Korea

Although there is no question that the Japanese authorities are maintaining a very vigorous censorship on all news emanating from Korea, sufficient finds its way through to the outside world to show that the present unrest in the country is being dealt with by the Japanese authorities after a characteristic fashion. As far as the treatment of the Koreans is concerned, the Japanese record, during the nine years that the country has been entirely governed from Tokyo, has not been an enviable one. The assassination of Prince Ito in 1909, followed two years afterward by the plot against his successor in the Governor-Generalship-of the country, General Terauchi, were, in themselves, the outcome of long periods of bitter repression, as they were the signal for still more rigorous "enforcements of authority." The terrible story from Shanghai, printed by this paper the other day, describing the scenes which followed the declaration of Korean independence, on the last day of February, might have been received with reserve, if not with actual doubt, had it not been for the fact that the immediate past affords all too many instances of similar outrages in Korea on the part of the Japanese.

The distinguishing feature of the present revolt, from the Korean standpoint, is its passive nature. The leaders have again and again urged upon the people the undesirahility of any resort to arms, and they have, it would appear, been obeyed to a most astonishing extent. And yet, in spite of this, in spite of the fact that twenty-nine of the thirty-three men who signed the declaration of independence voluntarily gave themselves up to the police, the latest reports show that, both in the towns and in the rural districts, but especially in the latter, violence of the most terrible description has been practiced. Unresisting crowds have been fired upon; scores of persons have been killed and hundreds wounded; churches have been wrecked; private houses have been entered and young men and women dragged off to prison, where most of them have been flogged. And this is perhaps the mildest part of the story. Very shameful details are becoming available, showing, in many cases, a barbarity on the part of the Japanese soldiers reminiscent of the Prussian method in Europe and elsewhere. Now the whole condition of things may be very exasperating to Tokyo. The Japanese authorities may declare, as they do declare, in effect, that the Koreans, since the Japanese took over the country, have never ceased from intrigue. They may point to all they have done for Korea, in the way of schools, roads, railways, and what not. They may point to order and good government, everywhere observable in normal times, and to a steadily growing prosperity of the Koreans themselves, all due to enlightened Japanese methods. In these days such protestations deceive no one. Schools, good roads, and good railways are not everything. Germany had them all. Japan annexed Korea nine years ago against the will of the Korean people, in open disregard of her plighted word, and her treatment of the Koreans since, that time, and her present treatment of them, render her claim to be regarded as a fit ruler of a subject people very doubtful. The world has had enough of Prussian methods, is determined to make an end of them wherever and whenever they may appear, and, sooner or later, lapan will have to answer to the world for this latest demonstration of the Prussian method in Korea.

France and the Liquor Question

It is not at all easy to appraise the importance of the recent decision of the French Government to continue the partial control of the liquor traffic which it has exercised during the past few years. Those who have made any attempt to follow the question, however, either in the Chamber or out of it, will be inclined to welcome the decision if only because it is a decision, and one which, whatever may be said for or against it, does not render the position any worse than it was, whilst it leaves the way open for the taking of more drastic measures at any time. At best, however, it is, of course, but the shelving of a very urgent matter, and it will be surprising if those who realize what the drink evil means to France, more than ever at this time, allow the matter to rest here for a moment.

The position is a difficult and complex one. On the one side there is a tremendously alert public opinion, led by such men as Mr. Ribot, Marcel Sembat, and Professor Debove, which is entirely convinced of the evils of alcohol, and would be prepared that the Nation should make any apparent sacrifice to see it abolished, or at any rate drastically controlled, whilst, on the other hand, there is not only that solid mass of large vested interests to be found in most countries, but the enormously widespread opposition of the "bouilleurs de cru." This term is applied to all owners of land producing certain fruits. chiefly cherries, plums, apples, and grapes, who are entitled to distill from these fruits, and produce alcohol for their own personal use, and to do this duty-free. This privilege has been gradually illegally extended. until it has become a recognized industry. Small owners everywhere convert their fruit into alcohol, keep what they wish for themselves, and dispose of the rest to the local innkeeper or to the large dealer through well recognized channels. As alcohol thus made is, as has been said, not hable to duty, the business is immensely profitable, and all attempts to curtail it by legal process, and there have been many, have failed. The majority of the deputies in the Chamber represent small country constituencies where the bouilleur de cru is strongly intrenched. suppress the monopoly, at the present time, easily frustrated, but the same opposition is sufficient to prevent the passage of any more far-reaching measure.

During the last four years, the matter has come up again and again. Mr. Ribot himself introduced a bill, providing for the most drastic reforms, as far back as the September of 1915, but, each time the matter has been brought up in the Chamber, means have been found for preventing any action until the whole issue has become a byword. The Chamber, however, in this respect, does not represent the most enlightened opinion in France, or even the majority of the French people. It is, in many cases, the old story of the representative of a few hundred people having the same voice in a decision as the representative of thousands. Such a situation cannot be continued indefinitely. Indeed there are already signs of a change. When Henry Cheron, speaking in the Chamber the other day, appealed to France, by whose heroism the Gernfans had been driven out from the land, to be not less courageous against the hideous enemy at home which, as he put it, "inflicts material and moral ruin on our families," his words were received with cheers, which ought to be encouraging. France has many urgent questions to settle, but none more urgent than this question of drink. The French people generally, and the French Chamber in particular, would do well to recognize this fact, and to act upon it.

Peary and the Pole

THE tenth anniversary of the discovery of the North Pole by Commander, now Rear Admiral, Robert E. Peary, which came this month, passed apparently without any official celebration. It was thus not much more than an affair of the calendar. Though it perhaps called for widespread notice and emphasis, there was little mention of the event in the daily or weekly literature of the United States. The circumstance is not, however, altogether strange or inexplicable. People generally are too near the deed that won the Pole to understand it in its true historical perspective, while to a world absorbed in the intense struggle of peace, following the prolonged struggle of war, the Ulyssean adventure of a decade ago which ended the first great epic of the frozen North has been temporarily overshadowed in importance, although still exerting its appeal to the imagination. It might have been otherwise, perhaps, were Robert E. Peary a man constantly in the public eye. But he is not. By choice, and by reason of the nature of his career, his appearances in public are sporadic. When he works now, it is as a man behind the scenes, and hero worshipers must perforce rest content with only occasional glimpses of the man who sent that thrilling message, from Indian Harbor, with its characteristically American "touch," that he "had the Pole." For a moment the veil may lift from the simple life of this exceptional man when he is scheduled to appear upon the public platform, or when he is furthering the apparently ceaseless activities of those doughty Polar followers of his, Captain Robert Bartlett and Donald B. Macmillan. But the veil is quickly dropped again.

It was only a few years before the Great War that much of the civilized world was in the habit of following Peary's great elemental struggles step by step, act by act. He began his work in the Nineteenth Century, which has been called the Century of Hope, and was the true era of territorial expansion and the application of discovery to human progress. Only in the Twentieth did he attain the culmination of his life work. And just as in true drama the master mentality, conscious of its goal, struggles unceasingly against opposition in order to attain it, so Robert E. Peary's dominating purpose was clearly seen crystallizing finally into a life purpose and mission. Through all those years of relentless preparation and professional effort, the public looked on like the spectators in an auditorium who take sides and sympathetically identify themselves with the strong central character as he battles, time and again, against odds that often overwhelm without ever conquering him.

It was a struggle, indeed, possessing intensely dramatic elements and destined to produce, in its final stages, thrills in full measure. Peary had fitted out what was to be his last expedition. Twice he had been near his goal and had had to turn back. He had been preparing, indeed, for this supreme effort for thirty years. His experience had been unique. He had lived through more winters and had mapped a larger area of northern Greenland than any other explorer. He was possessed of the supreme advantages which came from skill, courage, and ability to endure. In addition he had a stanch ship in the Roosevelt, and enthusiastic assistants, as well as the confidence of the Eskimo.

Then one morning a bolt suddenly dropped from the blue. The papers announced that Robert E. Peary, then making his way south to Indian Harbor with a piece of the precious Pole on board, had been forestalled by a comparatively unknown man, a man who, with scarcely any equipment or preparation, had gained that icy hummock which in the Peary photograph stands for the coveted top of the world. He had gained it not only a year and fifteen days, to be precise, before the naval officer, but with the ease of the man falling off the proverbial log. The big, persistent headlines of the newspapers of that morning, and for days afterward, seemed to shout at one that the news was only too true, and that whatever Robert E. Peary could do now, whatever success had attended his life's ambition, he could only be a kind of Polar second fiddle. When Peary's message came from Indian Harbor, a short time afterward, it fell disappointingly flat. The Commander, however, had no sooner heard of the claim of his would-be rival to Polar priority than he vigorously threw down the gauntlet, and there began that thrilling arctic controversy which, like the famous Tichborne claimant case in England, held men's attention by the sheer force of its dramatic interest until the Commander had successfully vindicated his right to be considered as the only white man who had stood on the world's north-

There may be those who still have their doubts, who, at any rate, are convinced that the Polar "claimant" actually believed in the veracity of his own story. The and so, not only is any attempt made in the Chamber to . world generally was unwilling, however, to concede so cheap a victory, but ready to believe with Theodore Roosevelt when he said of Peary: "Few understand how many years of careful training and preparation there must be before the feat can even be attempted with any chance of success," and to agree with Gilbert H. Grosvenor in his tribute: "The prize of four centuries of striving yielded at last to the most persistent and scientific attack ever waged against it. Peary's success was made possible by long experience and a tenacity and courage which knew no defeat."

The recluse of Casco Bay is helping and counseling the younger men, and his commanding figure looms up behind that of the doughty Newfoundlander, Captain Robert Bartlett, as he equips himself for that aerial flight to the North which bids fair to revolutionize all Polar expeditions of the future. There are immense tracts lying between Greenland and Alaska about which next to nothing is known, and men will not rest content until they have charted the Polar basin, mapped out its "lands," and learned accurately of its fauna and its flora.

EVIDENTLY there need be no hesitation as to the utility of contributing English volumes to the collection of books now being made for replenishing Serbia's ravaged libraries. At a recent gathering in London a war relief worker, just back from Serbia, reported that there is an eager circle of people who read English in Belgrade, and told how he himself encountered a boy of fifteen who had read the whole of "Samson Agonistes," and the daughter of an artisan who was reading "King Lear." In the speaker's opinion there is an opening for a good English school for girls in Belgrade.

"A FLOCK of dunlins in autumn or early spring spend some time each day on the seashore cutting extraordinary aerial figures. The starlings have a similar habit, but their aerial feats are not quite so varied and beautiful, and nothing like so rapid as the dunlins'. When a flock of dunlins rises for one of these exercises it will exhibit. within three or four minutes half a dozen totally distinct and regular figures in the air. One figure may resemble a spheroid, the next a tower, the third a square, the fourth a long fluttering pennon. In cutting these figures not a bird in the flock will fall out of its place to spoil the regularity and perfect finish of the feat. As they wheel about and pass from figure to figure, they appear as white, gray, black objects in quick succession. Then suddenly it is over. In a flash the flock, traveling fifty or sixty miles on hour, is nothing but a few disappearing dark specks in the distance." So writes Mr. G. A. B. Dewar in a recent article on birds in The Observer of London. The dunlin would seem to be well ahead of the airman in the matter of formation flying.

A good deal has been said about what many a farmer in the United States thinks of moving forward the hands of the clock, but very little about the disapproval of the children who, under the daylight-saving schedule, must go to bed before sunset. Stevenson would sympathize with them, and years ago expressed their feeling in the

I have to go to bed and see The birds still hopping on the tree. Or hear the grown-up people's feet Still going past me on the street.

And he would appreciate also the very recent English

"My dear Miss Smythe," the Bishop said, And is it true you go to bed
At half-past six, this lovely May, When all the rest are out at play?" "Oh yes," replied the child, "I do. I think it's very soon—don't you? But tho' the sun is shining bright, Just for Peace's sake I say good-night."

One does not at the moment remember anything just irement, by the Metropolitan Mus Art in New York, of the whole interior of an old house so far away as Portsmouth, New Hampshire, with the intention of eventually exhibiting it in the museum. The old house is distinguished as one of the best examples of Georgian architecture in the United States. Piece by piece its rare Colonial features, fireplaces, woodwork, stairs, cornices, and so on, will be taken down, transported to New York, and reassembled in the museum as they originally stood in Portsmouth. The exterior of the old dwelling takes its chances of survival in the ordinary course of events, but the interior will be preserved and become a part of the New York institution's growing collection of the best work of American artists and craftsmen in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries. Such a collection is a noteworthy enlargement of the usual program of an art museum; and the Metropolitan must needs build a new wing to house it.

A good many United States Senators and Congressmen must have been surprised to learn that an official of the National Woman's Party has them neatly cardindexed for nativity, ancestry, education, religion, and other personal details, together with their past records, their favorite newspapers, and a few more cards to record information about their fathers, mothers, and brothers. Apparently the sisters, the cousins, and the aunts are not card-indexed. The existence of this card-index of national legislators, which comes to general knowledge through a newspaper man who lately interviewed the woman who is directing the Washington campaign for the conversion of senators and representatives, shows the determination with which organized women are steadily pressing for recognition as a part of the American electorate. Whether or not it represents an altogether desirable activity for the women is a point upon which there will be differences of opinion. It is unfortunately true that card-indexes of personal information have been used by men in ways that were very much open to question.

Many times has the progress of the war in the East impressively reminded this Twentieth Century of names and places the antiquity of which has enriched them in memory. The tale is now told of the rediscovery, by a British expedition sent out from Cairo, of the ancient mines from which very likely may have come the emeralds which Cleopatra wore when she feasted Antony. The mines are believed to have been worked by a long line of Pharaohs, and to have been approaching exhaustion in the time of Cleopatra. Tools, lamps, baskets, and other ancient objects, some of which, in the opinion of antiquarians, are a thousand years older than the Christian era, were found on the long-deserted floors. About 100 years ago these mines were visited by a French explorer in Upper Egypt, after which they were again forgotten.
